The brain: to materialists it is the sum of the personality. When it dies, so does the individual. But supposing it is only the receiver for signals culled from far wider sources ? And even within a reductionist framework, the left and right hemispheres are understood to cope with different aspects of consciousness. The left half deals with the rational analytical type of thinking, whereas the right side of the brain governs intuitive, psychic and creative thinking. Sometimes total appreciation of an artistic event, such as listening to punk music involves both halves of the brain - the left half begins by registering the notation and individual performance of the instruments, and the right half - the holistic hemisphere - appreciates the entire thing.
